FINANCIAL MINISTER ST. PETERSBURG, 17th February M. Viohnegradski, Minister of Finance, ha submitted to the conneil of the empire a law to establish a metallic at adard as a preparatory morsure to the consolidation of the Russian monotary currency, the metallic standard to be an obligation. It provides that for a time commercial dealings and contracts for delivery of purchase, or leases, may be concluded on specie value. Payments due in conformity with such business agreements afterwards are to be made in Russian gold or silver or credit notes at rate fixed for every month by the Minister of Finance. Payments of fiscal import dues are also to be made in specie, but at an officially fixed rate, excepting custom duties, which are to be paid as heretofore in gold. The object of the measure is to bring gold and silver into circula-

LONDON, 20th February. Archdeacon Farrar is getting much public ensure for permitting Matthew Arnold to run the dedication of the Milton memorial window on Saturday as a private performance. Many Americans in London would have been glad of an opportunity to attend, simply out of respect to Mr. Childs, the distinguished American donor. Farrar remarked on opening the service that not only Americans, but Englishmen, had reasons to remember Childs' philanthropy with gratitude, yet what could and should have been made a memorable public service was transformed into a small, select private entertainment for few parishioners of Westminster, simply because Matthew Arnold had mortgaged his part of he proceedings to an American magazine. ——

The New York I orld was the only paper that printed the story of the dedication, and its representative would not have been admitted if he and been known to the three men on guard at the door. The London Times says, editorially, that morning:-"We understand that on Saturday afternoon the Milton window in St. Margaret's, Westminster, the gift of G. W. Childs of Phidelphia, was unveiled, and we believe that an address was delivered on the occasion by Matthew Arnold. The public were refused the representation of the press by the rector, Archdencon Farrar." The Evening News waxes wroth over it also, and called on Farrar to explain. The only explanation is that it was the wish of Matthew Arnold. At the eleventh hour a letter was sent to Minister Phelps that if any Americaus wished to attend they might do so. This, of course, was only available to the Americans who happened to be at that moment at the representative and Judge Arnoux. Minister Phelps and wife were the only Americans who happened to be there, and Arnoux would have known nothing about it if he had not called at the World office just as its representative was will be very angry. LONDON, 21st February.

Arch-Deacon Farrar adopted the usual mode of defence of a dignified Englishman to-day, and writes a letter to the Times which effectually loads on the shoulders of Matthew Arnold the esponsibility for turning the memorial service to England's greatest epic poet into a private performance, which enabled the thrifty Arnold t turn a dollar or two to his own account. Farrar frankly says in his letter that as Arnold had sold the paper on the genius of Milton to an American magazine, he very naturally wished that it should not be forestalled by publication elsewhere. Therefore, he says, the little gathering on Saturday afternoon was a purely private gathering of friends, each of which came only by special invitation. Public recognition of the gift of the window was made Sunday, when he alluded to it in his sermon. Farrar closes his letter with a pathetic little minster, is one that cannot be passed over, and we must have it out with Archdescon casion of national interest. Saturday afternoon the window, a very beautiful one, and the present of G. W. Childs of Philadelphia, was up-In regard to the ultimate distribution of the veiled and an address delivered by one of the
